NEWSPAPERARCHIVE®

BANGOR,

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 28, 1837.

The result of the several elections in the representative districts and towns where no election was made at the time of the Gubernatorial election, although not so striking at first view, we regard as the strongest evidence yet given that Maine is regenerated. We believe that in every contested district the Whigs have gained since the September election and in some instances very remarkably. These elections have demonstrated that our cause is onward that the people are with us and that every day and hour adds to our strength—that the days of humbug and corruption are over. Great credit is due to the vigorous and active and untiring Whigs in all these districts. They have done wonders, and even where they have failed, they have showed so bold a front and so determined a spirit and have gained so handsomely that they have disarmed the Tory victory of its sting. Look at Palmyra 100 majority wanting one vote, where last year the Tories had a majority. Look at Charleston, Garland and Atkinson a noble host of stout hearted whigs ready at their posts for the fourth heat. But we cannot enumerate them all, for our columns would not contain the record of the doings and praises of the Whig Invincibles in our State.

In our paper today will be seen the doings of a Convention of Citizens of the Counties of Penobscot and Somerset upon the subject of a new County and their petition to the Legislature. This is a subject of daily increasing importance, and will no doubt elicit much discussion. Our columns are open to the arguments of the advocates and opposers of the proposed division.

GEN. JACKSON'S FAME ABROAD. The Economist and Joint-Stock Banker's Journal, a London Journal, in some remarks on the General's Sunday letters to the Globe, in which he denounces the Banks and merchants, says.

"These letters, however, are to be read, not merely as amusing exhibitions of folly, but to be regarded as lamentable proofs of the general state of ignorance upon the subjects to which they refer."

A Coroner's Inquest was holden yesterday on the body of Jesse Webber, Jr. of Prospect, Master of the schr Rose. The verdict was that the deceased came to his death by accidental drowning having fallen into the river on the evening of the 26th instant, in attempting to pass from the schr. Rose to the schooner John and Frederic, lying at the wharf about five feet apart.

NEW YORK REPRESENTATIVES. A public dinner is proposed in New York, in compliment to Messrs. Hoffman and Curtis, the two Whig Representatives of that city in Congress.

The Jeffersonian, some three or four weeks ago, called upon the member of Congress from this District, to resign, and the Downeaster of last week, echoes the call. Though without authority to make pledges in his behalf, we will nevertheless hold ourselves responsible for his resignation, whenever satisfactory proof is furnished, that the two Senators in Congress, and the Representatives from Lincoln and Somerset and Penobscot Districts, have obeyed or will obey the will of their constituents. Upon Van Buren premises, the offer is a fair one. The September election, according to the Van Buren doctrine of Instruction, requires of Messrs. Ruggles and Williams, and Messrs. Cilley and Davee, what the Jeffersonian and Downeaster, require of Mr. Noyes. But to save all quibbling as to the election of Governor, &c. we agree to leave the Senators untouched, till after the organization of the State Government, in January, and will hold ourselves answerable for a new election of member of Congress in this District, provided Messrs. Cilley and Davee, only will resign. Now, Messrs. Jeffersonian and Downeaster, what say ye? If yea let the preliminaries be settled at once? If nay hold your humbugging tongues.—Eastport Sentinel

A GLEAM FROM ARKANSAS. The Louisville Ky., Journal of the 16th, says:

"We saw, on Saturday morning, a gentleman directly from Arkansas, who left the State after the election. The intelligence which he brought is most favorable. He says that the impression at Helena, when he left that place, was, that Ringgold, the Whig candidate was Governor by a decisive majority. Ringgold has swept the counties on the Mississippi. In Arkansas county, which lies upon the Arkansas river, his majority is three or four to one. As far as intelligence has been received, he is far ahead, although nothing has been heard from the counties in which his strength was supposed to be greatest."

At a meeting of Citizens from a number of Towns in the North parts of the county of Penobscot and the town of Parkman in Somerset County, assembled at Dover on Saturday the 21st of October, 1837. MR. WEBSTER'S SPEECH,

[Concluded.]

The operation of the joint resolution of April, 1816, aided, no doubt, in a proper degree by the institution of the bank, and the currency which it furnished, accomplished the great end of the resumption of specie payments; and for a long period we had no further trouble with the currency.

And I now proceed to say, sir, that the late President of the U. States has acknowledged this duty as often, and as fully and clearly, as any of his predecessors. His various admissions or recognitions of this obligation, are too recent and too fresh in every one's recollection, to require, or to justify, particular citation. All the evils we now feel indeed, we have encountered in the search after a better currency. It has been the avowed attempt to discharge the duty of Government connected with the circulation, that the late Administration has led us to where we now are. The very first charge that the late President ever brought against the bank was, "that it had not maintained a sound and uniform currency." Most persons, probably, will think the charge quite unfounded; yet this was the charge. Its dereliction of duty, or its want of ability to perform what had been expected from it, its failure, in some way, to maintain a good currency, was the original professed cause of dissatisfaction. And when the bill for rechartering the bank was negatived, it was not on the ground that Government had nothing to do with the national currency, but that a better provision for it might be made, than we had in the bank. The duty was not to be disclaimed, or thrown off, or neglected; new agents only were to be employed that it might be better performed. The State banks would do better than the National Bank had done; the President was confident of this, and therefore he rejected the national Bank as an agent, and adopted the State banks. And what he so constantly promised us would happen, he resolutely maintained, afterwards, had happened. Down to this last message, down to the last hour of his administration, he insisted upon it that the State Banks had fulfilled all his expectations, and all their own duties, and had enabled the Government to accomplish in the very best manner, the great and important objects of currency and exchange. We have the same head of the Treasury, sir, who has repeated and echoed all these statements, whether of prophecy or fulfilment, in successive reports, some of them not less tersely and intelligibly written than that now before us; and we have heads of other departments, who concurred, I presume from time to time, in the original statements, and in the faithful echoes of them, from the Treasury. All these functionaries have been laboring with the utmost zeal, as they professed, to perform their constitutional obligation of furnishing the country with a good currency, with a better currency, with the best currency; and they have dragged Congress, dragged the country, and dragged themselves into difficulty, perplexity and distress, in this long and hot pursuit. And now, behold, they draw up all at once, and declare that the object of all this toil and struggle is one with which they have nothing at all to do!

But, as the last message of the late President was loud and warm in its praises of the State Banks, for the good services which they rendered currency and exchange, so no doubt, would the first message of the present President have commended, with equal earnestness, the success with which Government had been able, by means of the State banks, to discharge this important part of its duties, if the events of May last had not left that subject no longer a topic of felicitation. By the suspension of specie payments, all was changed. The duty of Government was changed and the Constitution was changed also. Government was to give up, and abandon, forever, that very thing which had been the professed object of its most assiduous care, and most earnest pursuit for eight long and arduous years.

Mr. President, when I heard of the suspension of the banks, I was by the side of the Ohio, on a journey, in the course of which I had occasion frequently to express my opinion on this new state of things; and those who may have heard me, or noticed what I have said will bear witness that I constantly expressed the opinion that a new era had commenced, that a question of principle, and a question of the highest importance, had arisen or would immediately rise; that hereafter the dispute would not be so much about means as ends; that the extent of the constitutional obligation of the government would be controverted, in short, that the question, whether it was the duty of Congress to concern itself with the national currency must inevitably come the leading topic of the times. So I thought whenever I had the pleasure of addressing my fellow citizens, and so I think and feel now. I said often on these occasions, and I say now, that it is a question on which the people, by the regular exercise of their elective franchise, must decide. The subject is one of so much permanent importance, and public men have become so much committed on the one side or the other, that the decision must, as I think, be made by the country. We see an entirely new state of things. We behold new and untried principles of the administration advanced and adopted. We witness a bold and avowed rejection of the policy hitherto always prevailing. The Government has come not to a pause, but to a revulsion. It not only stops but it starts back; it abandons the course it has been pursuing for near fifty years and it reproaches itself with having been acting all that time beyond the limits of its constitutional power.

It was my proposition, sir, that the Message, the bill and the amendment, taken together, deny, in substance, that this government has any power or duty connected with the currency, or the exchanges beyond the mere regulation of coins.

And sir, is this not true? We are to judge of the message by what it omits, as well as by what it proposes. Congress is called together in a great commercial crisis. The whole business of the country is arrested by a sudden disorder of the currency. And what is proposed? Any thing to restore this currency? Any thing, with a direct view of producing the resumption of payments by the banks? Is a single measure offered, or suggested, the main purpose of which is general relief to the country? Not one. No, sir, not one. The Administration confines its measures to the Government itself. It proposes a loan, by the means of Treasury notes, to make good the deficiency in the revenue; and it proposes secure vaults, and strong boxes, for the safe keeping of the public monies; and here its paternal care ends. Does the message propose to grapple, in any way, with the main evil of the times? Seeing that that evil is one affecting the currency [illegible] the Message, like that of Mr. Madison, in 1815, address itself directly to that point, and [illegible] It abstains from all [illegible] of the [illegible] Government; and it looks no further. Sir, let me turn to the Message [illegible] that all its recommendations, and indeed, all the objects in calling Congress [illegible]

[illegible] tive purposes of relieving the wants of Government.

The President says that the regulations established by Congress for the deposite and safe keeping of the public monies having become inoperative by the suspension of payment by the banks; and apprehending that the same cause would so diminish the revenue that the receipts into the Treasury would not be sufficient to defray the expenses of Government; and as questions were also expected to arise respecting the October instalment of the deposite to the States, and doubting whether Government would be able to pay its creditors in specie, or its equivalent, according to law, he felt it to be his duty to call Congress together. These are the reasons for calling Congress. They are all the reasons; and they all have exclusive regard to the Government itself.

In the next place, let us see what measures the Message recommends to Congress. In its own language the objects demanding its attention are:

"To regulate, by law, the safe-keeping, transfer, and disbursement of the public moneys; to designate the funds to be received and paid by the Government; to enable the Treasury to meet promptly every demand upon it—to prescribe the terms of indulgence, and the mode of settlement to be adopted, as well in collecting from individuals the revenue that has accrued, as in withdrawing it from former depositories."

These are all the objects recommended particularly to the care of Congress; and the enumeration of them is followed by a general suggestion, that Congress will adopt such further measures as may promote the prosperity of the country. The whole enumeration, it is obvious, is confined to the wants and convenience of the Government itself.

And now, sir, let us see on what grounds it is that the Message refrains from recommending measures of general relief. The President says:

"It was not designed by the Constitution that the Government should assume the management of domestic or foreign exchange. It is, indeed, authorized to regulate by law, the commerce between the States, and to provide a general standard of value or medium of exchange in gold and silver; but it is not its province to aid individuals in the transfer of their funds, otherwise than through the facilities afforded by the Post Office Department. As justly might it be called on to provide for the transportation of their merchandise."

And again:

"If, therefore, I refrain from suggesting to Congress any specific plan for regulating the exchanges of the country, relieving mercantile embarassments, or interfering with the ordinary operations of foreign or domestic commerce, it is from the conviction that such measures are not within the constitutional province of the General Government, and that their adoption would not promote the real and permanent welfare of those they might be designed to aid."

The President, then, sir, declines to recommend any measure for the relief of commerce, for the restoration of the currency, or for the benefit of exchanges, on the avowed ground, that, in his opinion, such measures are not within the constitutional power of Congress. He is distinct and explicit, and so far entitled to credit. He denies, broadly and flatly, that there is any authority in this Government to regulate the currency and the exchanges, beyond the care of the coin. The question, then, is fairly stated. It cannot be misunderstood; and we are now to see how Congress, and, what is much more important, how the country will settle it.

Mr President, if, in May last, when specie payments were suspended, the president of a bank had called his council of directors together, informed them that their affairs were threatened with danger, that they could not collect their debts in specie, and might not be able to pay their creditors in specie, and recommended such measures as he thought their interest required; his policy, in all this, would have been no more exclusively confined to the interests of his corporation, than the policy of the Message is confined to the interests of this great corporation of Government. Both in practice, therefore, and on principle, in reality, and avowedly, the Administration abandons the currency to its fate. It surrenders all care over it, declines all concern about it, and denies that it has any duty connected with it.

Sir, the question then comes to be this. Shall one of the great powers of the constitution, a power essential to it, on any just plan or theory of Government, a power which has been exercised from the beginning, a power absolutely necessary and indispensable to the proper regulation of the commerce of the country, be now surrendered and abandoned forever? To this point we have come sir, after pursuing the "experiment" of the late administration for five years. And from this point, I am persuaded, the country will move, and move strongly, in one direction or another. Shall we go over to the gentleman from Missouri, and suffer him to embrace us in his gold and silver arms, and hug us to his hard money breast; or shall we return to the long tried, well approved and constitutional practice pursued by the Government.

As to the employment of the State Banks, for the purpose of maintaining the currency, and carrying on the operations of exchange, I certainly never had any confidence in that system, and have none now.

I think the State Banks can never furnish a medium for circulation, which shall have universal credit, and be of equal value everywhere.

I think they have no powers or facilities, which can enable them to restrain excessive issues of paper.

I think their respective spheres of action are so limited, and their currencies so local, that they can never accommodate what is desired in relation to exchanges.

Still, I prefer the employment of State Banks to the project before us; because it is less of a project; because it is less dangerous; and chiefly, because it does not surrender effectually, and in terms, a great power of the constitution.

In every respect the project is objectionable. It is but another "experiment;" and those who recommend it so zealously, were the authors of the last, and were equally full of confidence and assurance in regard to that.

Who invite us to try this experiment? What voices do we hear raised in its recommendation? Are they not the well known voices which we heard so often when the late experiment was begun? We know of but one accession. The voice of the member from South Carolina is heard, it is true, now mingling with the general strain; and that is all. Where then is the ground for confidence in this experiment more that there was in the last?

This scheme, too, is against all our usages and all our habits. It locks up the revenue, under bolts and bars, from the time of collection to the time of disbursement. Our practice has been otherwise, and it has been a useful practice. In 1832, [illegible] banks, since they had [illegible] of the public funds, to accommodate [illegible] especially to [illegible] And now a system [illegible] use of the public funds, by way of a loan or ac[illegible] offence, and to be prosecuted by indictment! Admirable, admirable consistency!

But the great objection to the measure, that which so much diminishes the importance of all other objections is its abandonment of the duties of the Government. The character of this project is, severance of the government from the people. This like the mark of Cain, is branded on its forehead. The government separates itself, not from the banks merely, but from the community. It withdraws its care, it denies its protection, it renounces its own high duties. I am against the project therefore in the principle and in detail; I am for no new experiments; but I am for a sound currency for the country. And I mean by this a convertible currency so far as it consists of paper. I differ altogether, in this respect, from the gentleman from S Carolina. Mere Government paper, not payable otherwise than by being receivable for taxes has no pretence to be called a currency. After all that can be said about it, such paper is mere paper money. It is nothing but bills of credit. It has always been, and always will be, depreciated. Sir, we want specie, and we want paper of universal credit, and which is convertible into specie at the will of the holder. That system of currency, the experience of the world, and our own experience, have both fully approved.

I maintain, sir that the people of this country are entitled, at the hand of this Government, to a sound, safe and uniform currency. If they agree with me, they will themselves say so. They will say "it is our right; we have enjoyed it for forty years; it is practicable it is necessary to our prosperity, it is the duty of Government to furnish it; we ought to have it, we can have it, and we will have it.

The language of the administration, on the other hand, is, "Good masters, you are mistaken. You have no such right. You are entitled to no such thing from us. The constitution has been misunderstood. We have suddenly found out its true meaning. A new light has flashed upon us. It is no business of ours to furnish a national currency. You cannot have it and you will not get it."

Mr President, I have thus stated what I think to be the real question now before the country. I trust myself cheerfully to the result. I am willing to abide the test of time and the ultimate judgment of the people; for it is a sentiment deeply infused into me, it is a conviction which pervades every faculty I possess, that there can be no settled and permanent prosperity to the commerce and business of the country until the constitutional duty of Government, in regard to the currency, be honestly and faithfully fulfilled.

"GRAVE AND WEIGHTY MATTERS!" To rob the people of more than nine million of dollars!

To issue ten million of dollars in Government shin-plasters!

To pay the eight dollar-a-day Congressman in gold and silver, and the eight dollar a month laborer, or the four dollar a month revolutionary pensioner, in rags!

To invent a sub-treasury scheme, by which the spies of Government will be stationed all over the land!

These are the "grave and weighty matters" to consider which Mr. Van Buren summoned Congress. Reader! what do you think of them? [Ohio Register.]

AN APPEAL TO THE DOG KILLER.

Loafer, spare that dog!
Touch not a hair or limb!
In youth he fought for me,
And now I'll fight for him.
What injury doth he,
That in his fated head,
The Mayor's stern decree
Must lodge a junk of lead?

My old and faithful dog,
Whose name and wide renown
Have frightened many a rogue;
And would'st thou shoot him down!
Loafer! thy wrath forbear!
Let Honesty go free
Though mad he would beware
Of such a thing as thee.

When but an idle boy,
Often with him I roved;
In all their gushing joy,
Him, too, my sisters loved;
And him my brothers dear,
The fond caress would give;
Loafer! who sent thee here?
Go! let that old dog live.

My heart strings round thee cling,
Close as thy hide, old friend!
Thy honors I will sing,
Thy life and fame defend,
Old dog! the Mayor brave!
And, loafer leave the spot,
While I've a hand to save,
Thy gun shall harm him not.
